

Prof Arezki BENFDILA is a senior lecturer and Research Director at the University Mouloud Mammeri Tizi-Ouzou Algeria. He is a senior associate at the ICTP-UNESCO-IAEA Institution. He got his DSc in Microelectronics Engineering at the University M. Mammeri, Algeria in collaboration with other International Institutions. He is a full professor since 2005 and had many scientific positions. He was elected associate at ICTP UNESCO IAEA in June 2000 and elected again as a senior associate in 2009, position he holds up to date.

He participated in important international events such as the G8- UNESCO Forum organized at ICTP in 2007. He has been elected as Bureau member of the African Physical Society in 2010 as well as the 50th anniversary of ICTP in October 2014.

He directed many international research projects namely with CNRS France. He is director of government research projects from 1995 up to date. He is a reviewer at different journals and Associate editor at the ARP ICTP.

He started the first master in microelectronic Engineering and has been elected as a member of the Pilot committee of the Algerian National Microelectronic Network. He was the initiator of the first Algerian network on Micro and nanotechnology, which has been followed by the international conference on Micro and Nanotechnology organized with a strong international collaboration in 2006 He has also directed many PhD and MPhil theses as well as Master and Engineer projects.